Died 4 November 1918

Aged 29

Buried Caudry British Cemetery

Grave IV.H.2

William Pook was a Devon man by birth and ancestry. Pook is an unusual name, possibly brought over by Dutch wool traders to the Tiverton area. It can mean an elf or goblin, but in Devon and Somerset is also used to describe a haycock. He was born on April 19 1889 in the country north east of Morebath, where his father, another William, from West Anstey, worked as a shepherd and farm worker.

These countrymen of the turn of the 19th century had a tough life. By 1901 William, aged 11, was living with a farmer at Keens, Morebath, still at school but also working as a Farm Servant.

By 1911, now 22 (these Census ages are a bit flexible) he was married to Florence (born in Bampton, but living with her family in Morebath), and living at New Cottage, Cove, working as a Farm Waggoner. His father had also moved to Cove, and was working at Court Farm. Cove is a small village in the Exe valley, between Tiverton and Bampton. The location is most beautiful, but it must have made for very hard farm work in an unmechanised age.

The family was not an especially large one; William was the oldest of four, one of whom had died. His younger brother George appears to have been in the Royal Field Artillery in India.

The puzzle is why William should have moved to Buckland St Mary. His first son - William again - was born at Cove in 1912; William was then working as a farm labourer. His second, Francis, was born at Blackwater, Buckland St Mary, in 1914. It's about 29 miles from Cove to Buckland St Mary; not far now, but a long way circa 1913. Was he employed at a Hiring Fair? Did he have a contact in Buckland? We don't know. Of course, viewed in the light of a brother who enlisted and went off to India, maybe this seems not such a huge leap.

Having been working as a Road Contractor in 1914 when his son Francis was born, by 1917 he was working for Tom Lee House at Colley Farm, Buckland St Mary. In July the Taunton Courier reports an appeal before the Chard Tribunal by Mr House for exemption from military service of two of his agricultural workers, William Pook and H. Middleton. The appeal was adjourned, and no further reports of what happened next can be found. The records of most of the Tribunals were destroyed after the war. The appeal obviously failed, because the next certain thing we know of William is that he was in the 6th Battalion the Dorset Regiment.

Farming at that time may have been tough, and the move from Cove to Buckland St Mary a disruption of the life he knew, but his call up and removal to the Western Front went beyond anything he might have expected from his pre-war life.

William was probably in the Army by August or September 1917; he enlisted at Ilminster. Allowing about 6 months for training, he would have been sent to France by February or March 1918, just in time for the German Spring Offensive. Freed principally by the withdrawal of Russia from the war after the Bolshevik Revolution of 1917, Germany was able to send many more troops to the Western Front. Their attack was expected, but was nonetheless devastating, pushing the Allied forces far back over ground so bitterly fought for during the previous years. The Germans in the end overreached themselves, brought down by exhaustion, over-extended supply lines and, very importantly, the arrival of the Americans in force.

Dorsets Regimental Badge

This was the maelstrom into which William was thrust. For the 6th Dorsets, the attack began on March 21; they were driven back and scattered, fighting in small units, exhausted and without food. It was the beginning of April before some sort of order was restored; they had then been in action continuously for 22 days, and their 50th Division had lost two thirds of its numbers. Yet the History of the Regiment comments on the 'nonchalant cheerfulness of the men' in the face of adversity. At this time too the 1918 influenza epidemic was raging, but the 50th were not so badly affected as some.

Gradually, the situation reversed, and the Allies were pursuing the Germans north and east. With their successful advance, warfare became more open and free moving as they worked back across old territory, but not without heavy losses.

'For the first time since August 22nd the whole Division was out of the line. It had been in action for 22 days and had fought forward 19 miles. This was the end of the first phase of the battle of Bapaume, in which 34,250 prisoners were taken and 270 guns.' History of the Dorsetshire Regiment 1914-1919 – Capt G O'Hanlon MC. There were other hard-fought actions, culminating in the battle of Neuvilly, a fight across the River Selle. They were then out of the line till November 3.

On November 4, while the final peace negotiations were going on between Marshal Foch and German representatives, an attack was launched by all 3 Brigades through the Mormal Forest. Their own 18-pounders fired short and caused 16 casualties; the day ended with overall casualties of 5 men killed and 42 wounded in reaching the forest, and in the fighting in the forest 7 killed and 33 wounded.

This was the last fighting of the 50th Brigade. It went on a day too long for William Pook, who was, we think, wounded that November 4, and died later in the day - one week before the end of the war, and on the same day as the poet Wilfred Owen. He should have been taken to 3 Casualty Clearing Station, but there is no record of his name there.

A sad little postscript: his son William had started at Buckland St Mary School in June 1917 when he was 5. He left on December 2 1918, just about when news of his father's death must have arrived. Florence Pook was still living in Blackwater then; one can imagine her scooping up the two boys and heading back to some comfort from her family in Devon.

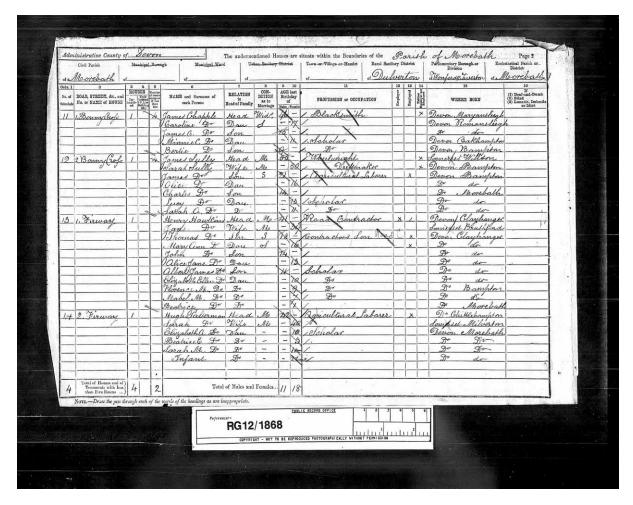

She re-married in 1924, but died at the age of 54 in 1936. Both boys seem to have survived WW2, but young William died aged 41 in 1953.

As well as being recorded on the Buckland St Mary War Memorial, William is also on the Memorial at Cove. The motto at the base of the cross and memorial reads 'In hoc signo vinces' — 'In this sign [ie the Cross] you will conquer'. The church in which it was housed having been de-consecrated, it now sits rather oddly in a corner of the Village Hall car park, a stiff climb up the hill, but well-tended and surrounded by the most stunning distant views over the Exe valley.

CHARD TRIBUNALS.

BOROUGH CASES.

A CHRISTADELPHIAN'S CONSCIENCE.

THE PRESS AND MILITARY SERVICE. Tuesday.—The Chairman (Mr. J. Hockey) presided. Mr. W. T. Dominy was the military representative.
THE LAGE TRADE.

-A POINT CLEARED UP .- The

Turbay.—The Chairman (Mr. J. Hockey) presided. Mr. W. T. Dominy was the military representative.

The Lage Trade.—A Point Clearing Ur.—The Chairman announced at the outset of the meeting that according to a ruling given by Judge the Hon. W. B. Lindley (chairman of the County Appeal Tribunal) on the previous Saturday, twist hands in the lace trade were included in the certified occupations' list. He thought this would simplify matters in their dealings with the lace trade.—The military representative: Judge Lindley may rule that way, and someone else may rule otherwise. I have a letter from the War Office stating that the lace trade is not included in the list of restricted occupations.—Mr. W. G. Warren produced a copy of the list, which he had not received through his own tribunal tand copies had never been issued to the members). This plainly showed that the making of plain net was included in the list of certified occupations.—Mesers. Boden & Co., lace manufacturers, entered applications for Frederick Berry, 18, single, and ames Welch, 19, single, Ci., twist hands.—Mr. R. H. Blood appeared in support of the application, and mentioned that Berry had now been rejected as unfit for service. Welch was engaged on Government work, and since he was last before the tribunal the firm had lost one more man, making their percentage of men in the Army II per cent.—Six months' exemption was allowed to Welch, and the application for Berry was withdrawn.

On AGRICULTURAL WORK—Messrs. Dening & Co., of Crimchard Works, applied for the retention of Albert Manning, 18, single, A, a fitter's apprentice, of Wacfeord, and John Aplin, 40, married, iron moulder.—The latter had not been before the Medical Board, and his case was adjourned to enable this to be done.—Mr. Dening stated that in regard to Manning, he was wholly engaged in agricultural work of national importance. He failed to see the advisability of sending these men away, for they were not sent into the Army, but if they passed the test they were put to their trade.—Thre
